INTRODUCTION

Although there are many factors that affect a customer's brand choice such as packaging, pricing and promotions, brand awareness is the second most important factor after quality. According to theory, consumers choose a brand they recognize, before an unfamiliar brand.

The main use of promotional items is to provide brand awareness. Almost anything can be branded with a company's name or logo and used for promotion. Promotional items and business gift are the most effective way of promoting your company, ideas, and events, from open days to product launches, meeting to conferences and exhibitions.

In a time where everyone wants to save money, one question comes to mind: what promotional strategies do I use to get the word out? Many marketing strategies would budget for promotional items to promote their business and brand.

Research has shown the high effectiveness of promotional items in raising brand awareness. For example 76.1% of people that participated in a survey were able to recollect the name or logo of companies that gave them free promotional items. Also an incredible 50% of the people who received corporate promotional items from a company supported that same company afterwards.

Our principal goal is exceeding the expectation of every client by offering outstanding efficiency, keeping and developing with him a long term business relationship based on full confidence and reliability.

PRINTING GUIDE

Different promotional products depending on what material they are made out, naturally lend themselves to certain print techniques over others. Below is an introductory guide into the world of printing!

Embroidery

This process is where your corporate message is stitched on to your promotional products. This requires a special machine which can weave up to 4 to 8 colors at a time. The number of stitches required to produce the design is usually between 5,000 and 10,000 which determines the cost.

Good Points: Embroidered promotional clothing gives a more luxury feel to the product.

Not So Good Points: Embroidery struggles with intricate details.

Engraving

Laser engraving is the personalization technique where computer controlled laser machine is used to engrave, etch or mark a promotional product.

Good Points: Extremely high detailed images can be produced using this technique gives a really elegant look to a product.

Not So Good Points: You are limited by the color of the material being engraved.

Sublimation Printing

Sublimation is a printing technique that allows us to print full color images on a wide array of items such as t-shirts, coffee-tea mugs and ceramic tiles. Solid dye particles are converted into a gas using heat and pressure then are forced to bond with the material they are dyeing and converted back to a solid.

Good Points: Very High Quality Images

Pad Printing

Pad printing or Tampon printing, uses a metal plate produced from the artwork with a raised logo. The plate is fixed into the pad printer and inked. The promotional product is placed in a fixed place so that successive products will be printed in the same position- something which is vital on two color work. The 'pad' - a firm yet resilient synthetic material is then pressed against the plate taking up the logo, which is then transferred to the product.

Good Points: With pad printing you are able to print on any shape of surface you like. Printing on tricky, uneven surfaces like golf balls for example isn't a problem.

Not So Good Points: It is impossible for tints and tones to be reproduced.

Screen Printing

Screen printing or silk screen printing to be precise, is a common print technique used on many promotional products, but plastic in particular. The process works via a 'screen' of a very fine mesh within a frame.

Good Points: Screen Printing is a very versatile technique as the printed surface doesn't have to be under any pressure – so it is perfect for relatively delicate materials like thin plastics for example.

Not So Good Points: There is a real difficulty in reproducing exact tints in colors, especially in smaller items, due to the nature of using a mesh to force a color through onto the product. The problem is reduced when printing on larger promotional items like T Shirts and umbrellas for example.

A black and white photograph of a man in a dark suit, white shirt, and tie, wearing sunglasses. He is standing on a city sidewalk, looking towards the camera. He is holding a black rolling suitcase with his right hand. In the background, there are tall city buildings and a yellow taxi cab. The image is partially obscured by a green text box on the left and a white diagonal shape on the right.

HISTORY...

Doyenne of the French institutions and located in the heart of the capital, Monnaie de Paris remains highly relevant today thanks to its two areas of activity: the production of commemorative pieces of art in precious metals at its Paris site (collectible coins, decorations, medals, jewellery, castings) and the striking of circulating French and foreign coins at Pessac in the Gironde region of France.

Since 1775, the art workshops of Monnaie de Paris have been designing, engraving, striking, stamping, casting, enamelling, polishing and patinating.

Its sense of artistic creation combined with an expertise in metal makes the Monnaie de Paris a contributor to the French luxury industry.
